RAVENNA, OHIO: WEDNESDAY, JAN. 3, 1855.

ADDRESS OF THE CARRIER, TO THE PATRONS OF THE PORTAGE SENTINEL

The changing seasons in their annual round, ushered in the morning of the year; Spring, Summer, Automn, each in turn was and houry Winter once again is here. Ilme in its conseless march forever on, earing its millions to their silent home, Has made a record of the year just gone, and from the pages we in time to come. May wisdom tears, and clear instruction find, To cheer the heart, and elevate the mind. Change, change, is writ on all beneath the sun, O'er land and sea, death has its pinions apread; The loved, and lovely from our midst have gone, And cherished friends are numbered with th Yet mourn not the departed; they are well; The chain that bound them to the earth is riven, Beyond the grave, in a fair land they dwell, Where milder skies adorn the arch of Heaven

The ocean comet'ry has had its share Of victims for the buriai. Pathoms deep Below its emiling surface, brave and fair Lie pale and silent in their final sleep. Their coffin-bed is on the ocean floor, Their resting place is with the "stormy main," The voice of joy, shall waken them so more, Mor sound of gladness call to life again , But o'er the wild waves of the foaming surge, Comes the solemn chant of their funeral dirge

Then but us wander where the Cypress waves, And strew our avergreens upon their graves

Within the year, what scenes of war and death, Have marked and marred beyond th' Atlantic's floo Dark cloude and wild, attend the armies path, And Europe's fairest fields are red with blood. France, England, Russia, three strong nations most Their forces marshaled and the war begun; Ab, many a grave shall grow beneath their feet, Beforethe work of carnage will be done; And many a heart with martial glory proud, Shall pulseless lie within a soldiers shroud.

The year gone by, has had its hours of mirth, Its scenes of song, and revelry and gladness, And Joy has reigned around the fireside hearth, Where not a single heart was known to sadness The song, the dance, the banquet and the wine, The friendly greeting and the social glee, Have whiled away full many an hour of time, That bright in all our memories shall be. O wild and glad those golden hours have been Where love and beauty mingled in the scene !

Though bloody wars in many lands are waged. Though wealth has failed to crown the farmer's toll. The pestitence has stalked abroad in rage, And death has gathered in shundant spoil, Still peace has blessed us with her genial smile, Still plenty crowns us with sufficient cheer, The pestilence has stayed itsmarch awhite And health and gladness, close the dying year. For favore shown, let heartfelt praise be given To Him who reigns on earth and rules in Heaven.

Our government, the noblest and the best That human wisdom ever yet has planned, rom the Atlantic to the growing West Offers a shield to guard on every hand. Here in our land, on proud Columbia's shore, The oppressed and exiled of the world, may come; on's arm shall torture them no more, Here, they may find a shelter and a home. Yes, on the soil by pilgrim fathers trod om shall dwell-freedom to worship God

Though tyrantfactions now and then may rise, Prescription its black banner wide unfur!

And burning churches light the midnight skies, And men grow wild amid the fearful whirl Of maddening passions, still above the storm Bright as the morning of a glorious day Pair Liberty exalts her radiant form And this strange furer soon shall pass away No Secret Order with proscriptive hand Can triumph long in this, our native land.

"Our native land!" how many bosoms swell With proud emotion at those thrilling words! The soil is sacred where our fathers fell. And rich the blessings purchased with their swords. Then let us pledge our honor and our lives Still to preserve the freedom which they gave, No better land is known beneath the skies, No prouder flag floats o'er the ocean wave. Long may the States that form our Union, be nd in a chain of love and liberty.

But the Carri) rs lay must close. Patrons and Prien May the New Year whose morning brightly dawns, Be happy with you till its evening ends, And bright the record of each hour that's gone And each giad day as "time's eternal tide" Bears you along upon its swelling flood, oful and gently may its waters glide On to the land of rest, your home and God. May works of virtue all your lives employ. bese are the wishes of the
